Leah Jay gets behind 10thousandgirl campaign

10thousandgirl was the brainchild of young Wagga woman Zoe Lamont who believed it was important for the young women of regional Australia to take control of their financial affairs and goals, so she set about doing this by making them aware, removing the mystery and providing them with the necessary tools and understanding of key financial principles to allow them to take their first steps towards financial independence. The demand for this not for profit campaign has far exceeded Zoe's expectations and now is on its way to Newcastle.

We, along with other local businesses including Forsythes and Newcastle Financial Planning, have thrown our support behind the one-day life planning workshop being held in Newcastle Sunday 27th November. As part of the day long workshop, a panel of experts including Leah will answer any questions from the women participating. The aim is to allow young women to find their own path in a non-pressured environment.

It was an easy decision to support the 10thousandgirl campaign for, because of its underlying principle as well as being able to play a positive part in the messages being relayed to young women looking to establish themselves financially and with that possibly investing in property.

"The earlier you begin to invest the more time it has to work for you" says Leah. "We're pleased to be involved with 10thousandgirl in providing a forum of support and advice for women planning their financial security and independence".

If you or someone you know would be interested in attending the workshop, please contact Cassie Lantry on 0408 414 758 or cassandral@leahjay.com.au.
